The Program

Center for Community provides case management services for Non-Tribal families residing in Southeast Alaska receiving Alaska Temporary Assistance (ATAP). ATAP has a 60-month time limit wherein clients are expected to maximize self-sufficiency via appropriate programs and services designed to provide the support required to minimize months of assistance used and to improve the opportunity for self-sufficiency. The program is administered by the Division of Public Assistance (DPA); it is funded by a combination of state general funds and federal Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) block grants.

ATAPs overarching goal is to "Move Alaskans from welfare into jobs so they can support their families, and maintain a safety net for those truly in need." The Work First Model is designed to achieve this goal. The Work First philosophy maintains that "any job is a good job and that the best way to succeed in the labor market is to join it." Work First clients are expected to find employment and close their ATAP cases as soon as possible; the program works methodically to manage barriers, plan a job search, and help clients successfully apply for jobs.

The Families First track is designed to address qualifying clients with more complex needs; it holds that assisting families address issues that interfere with their capacity to work will facilitate long-term self-sufficiency. This track serves clients who are working with agencies other than ATAP Case Management, or those clients who cannot immediately accept fulltime employment. The program focuses on increasing self-sufficiency by supporting health, safety and wellness along with partner agencies and family efforts. Interagency Family Support Teams, which include clients as primary members, work together to develop realistic plans for self-sufficiency.

Eligible ATAP clients are assigned to the Work First or Families First by DPA according to their needs.
